PREFACE

DOWN to the time of Leicester's Chancellorship, admission to the University was wholly independent of the Colleges. In some of the later foundations, a limited class of scholars, or junior members, was introduced; and provision was also made for the reception of extraneous members, some, of the lower degree of Servitors or bible clerks, some, of the higher degree of Commensales, or Commoners. But the bulk of the younger students were merely admitted to the privileges of the University, and were not attached to any College. Oriel, which belongs to the earliest period of College foundations, had no provision in its statutes for any besides the members of the corporate body, the Provost and Fellows. Even after other Colleges, of equal antiquity, had fallen in with the prevailing practice of later foundations, and had created out of their junior members, a class of Scholars with rights, or at least expectations, of succession to Fellowships, Oriel remained far into the present century, the unique example of a College, with Commoners, but without Scholars. It will be seen, however, in the pages of this volume, that there was a brief period in the middle of the sixteenth century, when Oriel was inclined to follow the prevalent custom, and to choose Scholastici, with the promise more or less certain of a Fellowship in the future. Happily for the fame of the College, this danger passed away, and the Fellowships at Oriel remained open to the whole University, without restriction or preference to its own members. It is to a great extent to this accident that the College owes the eminence which it attained in the present century.

As regards, however, the other classes into which the extraneous members of Colleges fall, the condition of Oriel resembles its neighbours: and the present volume is intended to collect the names of the members of all these classes, or in other words, the names of all the persons entered on the College books between the years 1500 and 1700, omitting those only who were elected to Fellowships direct from elsewhere. It is hoped that in another volume the names of all the members of the Foundation will be published, with a fuller account of each than has been admitted into the plan of the present Register. Fellows are only noticed here, if they were admitted to the College previously to their election; and in their case, no particulars are given of a later date than that election.

The lowest order in the College was that of Bateller (batellarius) or Servitor (serviens). On this footing were admitted students of humble birth or condition, students whose parents were below the then well defined class of gentlemen, but for whom both the Colleges and the University made distinct provision. They obtained admission to all the privileges of the place, at lower charges, and on a lower scale of living. Most of the sons of parochial clergy were entered on this footing: and it was the class from which the College Fellowships were mainly filled. The term 'serviens,' 'Servitor,' requires little explanation: they were expected to perform various duties, which would now be considered menial, but which in the sixteenth century were commonly accepted as proper for one of lower degree to perform for his betters, and which were not looked upon as degrading. The Servitor waited not only on the College authorities, or on his tutor, but also on his fellow students. It was not unusual for the son of an esquire or a knight to bring up with him to College a humble companion from his own home, who thus obtained the benefits of the University at his young master's cost, and who repaid his obligation by his services. The alternative title 'Bateller,' 'Batellarius,' is more obscure. But whatever the origin of the word may be, there is no doubt that it refers, like the corresponding terms, Commoner and Commensalis, to the regulations of the student's living. Battels is the expression used in the College accounts of the early part of the fifteenth century for the supply of provisions to tradesmen, servants, labourers, and others of humble condition, part of whose wages was given in kind. The further extension of the term Battels to the whole of the charges for food probably dates from the time when, in addition to the common meals served in the Hall, the members of the College were allowed to draw supplies from the kitchen and buttery, to be consumed in their own chambers. These supplies, delivered out in irregular quantities according to the wants of the consumer, came to be called Battels, in contradistinction to Commons, the ancient fixed allowances for each member of the common table. At the present day, Battels is the term generally used for the whole charge for food, and Commons retains its appropriate meaning of a fixed regular portion. But in older times, the servientes had no regular allowance. After waiting on their masters at dinner or supper, they made their meal on the broken meat that was left: their food was charged on the accounts as Battels, in the same way as the doles given in earlier times to persons of humble rank[1]. These Servitors or Batellers were in many other ways distinguished from their fellow students. They paid lower fees both to the University and to the College: they wore a different dress: they were lodged not in separate chambers, but in the chambers of their masters, sleeping in truckle beds in the same room with the tutor, fellow, or commensalis on whom they waited.

To this class belonged the College Exhibitioners. Of these the normal number was twelve, six on the foundation of John Carpenter, Bishop of Worcester, and formerly Provost; and six on the foundation of Dr. Richard Dudley. The first were maintained by a charge on an estate held by the Master and Brethren of S. Antony's Hospital in London, and were for that reason generally called by the name of S. Antony's Exhibitioners, though as will be seen in the Register, they sometimes appear as Carpenter Exhibitioners. It is not altogether clear how they were nominated; in several instances the Master of S. Antony's Hospital appears as patron: in one or two instances it is the Dean of Westbury College, another of Bishop Carpenter's foundations in the neighbourhood of Bristol: later on, the Dean and Chapter of Windsor, to whom the estate on which their stipends was charged had been transferred from the dissolved Hospital of S. Antony, occasionally nominate: but from the year 1562 onwards, the presentation seems to have been exercised by the Provost alone. The Dudley Exhibitioners were founded in 1529: the first holders were admitted into the College in that year: but after Dr. Dudley's death difficulties arose in the way of carrying out his intended benefactions, and by the final settlement agreed upon in 1544 between the College and his heir, the nomination to two of the Exhibitions was reserved to the Dudley family. This right was usually exercised in favour of a scholar from Cumberland or Westmoreland, where the family was seated: and the holder of the Exhibition was frequently, and in the seventeenth century invariably, allowed to reside in Queen's College, the natural home of north-country students. The connexion of these Dudley nominees with Oriel is, therefore, very slight: their names do not appear upon the College books: but their appointment is duly recorded, and they have therefore been included in the present Register. On the extinction of the Dudley family in 1655, the nomination to all the Exhibitions became vested in the College. It was not originally contemplated that either the S. Antony or the Dudley Exhibitioners should be entitled to lodging within the walls of Oriel: and an agreement was made with the Principal of S. Mary Hall for their reception in the Hall at a fixed charge. Accordingly, at their admission, they were called upon to promise obedience to the Principal, as well as to the Provost: the last recorded instance of this requirement is in 1592, by which time the practice of receiving extraneous students within the College had become well established. The stipends of all these Exhibitioners was at the rate of eight pence a week each during residence. At a later period than the close of this Register, the number of the Exhibitions was reduced to six, with a double stipend: and before the present century they ceased to have any separate existence, and became united with the College Bible Clerkships and with some other small Exhibitions of later foundation, in which shape they continue to the present day.

Above the Bateller, ranked the Commoner, a name which is now taken to include all students not on the foundation of a College, but which had originally a very different meaning. As a class, the Commoner comes into being later than the Bateller, or the Commensalis. He belongs to the youngest of all the orders of students, and he has by this time nearly outlived all his elder brethren. As has been already said, the name of Commoner is derived from the terms on which he was admitted. He was to be entitled to Commons, to receive the same fixed regular quantity of food at the College table as was served to the members of the Foundation, and at the same charge. The corresponding class at Cambridge bore the name of Pensioners; they occupied chambers within the walls, and paid the Pensio, or room rent. To the class of Commoners belonged the bulk of the students, whose fathers were of the upper ranks of society, the esquires and gentlemen of the country. The rise of the clergy in social position is marked by the gradual increase in the number of admissions of their children into the rank of Commoners. Batellers and Servitors could at any time, if their circumstances allowed it, be promoted into the higher class: this not unfrequently followed the taking of the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and was the rule upon taking that of Master. No mention of Communarii has been discovered before the sixteenth century: but several instances occur early in that century, of the admission of Graduates to be Commoners with the Fellows and to share the common table (see below under the years 1518, 1524, 1527, 1530). The introduction of Commoners in large numbers was no doubt the result of the changes made under Leicester's Chancellorship. From 1583, when the Treasurers' Accounts recommence after an hiatus of some length, the number of admissions in each year is recorded, and the fees received are accounted for: from 1600 the names are also given.

The Commensales were distinguished from the Commoners by their admission to share the Fellows' table; and from this circumstance was derived the vernacular rendering of their name, Fellow Commoner, one who takes his Commons with the Fellows. Their fathers were generally of a degree above the ordinary gentleman, esquires of good family or of great wealth, knights and noblemen. Some members of this class appear to have been admitted at Oriel from the very first. Such was Thomas Arundel, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, within fifty years of the foundation. In the Treasurers' Accounts for the year 1512–13, appears an entry of the payment 'pro communiis quinque commensalium per 7 'septimanas in patria xlvi^{s} viij^{d},' showing that they then received at the same rate as the Fellows, sixteen pence a week. But their numbers cannot have been very large. With the development of the College as a place of education for young students, they grew into more importance. They enjoyed special privileges which distinguished them from the ordinary Commoners: they wore a handsomer dress, and they paid higher fees. Part of these fees was applied to the purchase of College plate; and the earliest notice of their names is in the form of a Register recording the several articles of which they were the accredited donors: though it is tolerably clear that they had little choice in the matter, and that the pieces of plate to which their names were affixed were paid for out of the tax to which they were required to contribute. When the quantity of plate acquired in this way was considered sufficient, the fees were applied to the purposes of the College Library. They were again diverted in 1636 to the fund for rebuilding the College. By the time this want was satisfied, the store of College plate had been sacrificed to the wants of Charles I: and during the Commonwealth, the contributions of the Commensales were applied to replace what had been taken. From the Restoration onwards they were again devoted to the College Library, the fixed sum of £7 being charged on each admission. The present contents of the College plate room, and the old lists of the pieces given before 1642, have been of great service in compiling the present Register. It ought, however, to be observed that it was the frequent practice to sell or exchange pieces of plate which had become worn out, or were no longer in fashion: and, even if there had been no Civil War, it is probable that very few of the ancient gifts would have been handed down to modern times. Even between 1600 and 1640, several pieces had been parted with in this way: and of those which were given in the Commonwealth time, all but a very few have been replaced by more modern articles, though the inscriptions have been in most cases carefully transferred.

It was and is the practice at Oriel to admit to the Fellows' table all who have taken the degree of M.A.: and more than one instance will be found in the Register where a Master of Arts, formerly only a Commoner or even a Bateller, assumes the title of Commensalis.

It remains to describe the principal sources from which this Register has been compiled. The most important of these are the volumes of the University Registers, edited by Mr. Boase and Mr. Clark, volumes I, X, XI, XII, and XIV of the publications of the Oxford Historical Society. Mr. Foster's Alumni Oxonienses, 1500–1714, has also been of great service: though unfortunately, the later volumes did not appear until a considerable number of sheets had already passed through the press.

The College Books which have been used are the following.

I. The College Register. This is principally concerned with recording the corporate acts and orders of the Society, and the elections of Fellows and Provosts: there are very few entries which throw any light on the relation of the College to the younger students. But the volume contains a separate Register of the Dudley and S. Antony Exhibitioners, and from this source have been taken nearly all the names which occur before 1572. This Register is not very carefully kept and the distinction between the two classes of Exhibitioners is frequently confused. A former Fellow has taken great pains to correct these errors, and to establish the true order of succession to each of the twelve Exhibitions: but only to be followed by an unkind critic, who pursues him from entry to entry with such comments as 'frustra te 'torques,' 'nugae,' 'nec Oedipus ad expediendum sufficiet,' 'tibi ipsi contradicis,' 'corruit haec chimerica successio,' 'nihil 'omnino refert quis cui successit.' The College Register also contains a list of the Commensales, beginning with the name of Robert Pierrepont, admitted 1596, and ending with that of Charles Trevanian, admitted 1610. The chief purpose of this list appears to have been to record the gifts of plate made on each admission: and it contains a somewhat full description of each article.

II. The Treasurers' Accounts. The present series of these accounts begins in 1450, and still continues in the same form: but the volume containing the accounts from 1526 to 1583 is missing. At some time during this interval the entry of the receipts from the fees paid by Commoners must have been first introduced: and as has been stated above, the accounts record the number, and after 1600 the names, of the Commoners admitted in each year. These numbers and names appear in the present Register under their respective years, the spelling of the names being given literatim. The volume of accounts from 1583 to 1649 also contains lists of College plate, made out in the years 1596, 1623, and 1635. A few other particulars have been gathered from the same source.

III. The Caution Books. The earliest lists of cautions are recorded at the end of one of the volumes of Treasurers' accounts. These lists run from 1617 to 1630. In 1627 begins the first of the series of Caution Books, which from that time have been and still are regularly kept.

IV. The Buttery Books. The earliest of these books now existing is that belonging to the year 1642–3: and after that date the series is still very imperfect. The books are missing from the years following; 1649–50, 1657–8, 1669–70, 1671–2, 1678–9, 1679–80, 1681–2, 1684–5: for the six years 1696–1702: for the three years 1702–5: for 1707–8, 1712–13, 1717–18 and 1718–19. In the Buttery Books the names of the members of the College are arranged in their proper classes: first the Provost and Fellows, then Noblemen and Commensales, then Masters of Arts, reckoned as Commensales, then Commoners under the degree of Master, and lastly, the Batellers or Servitors. The name of each member is entered at his admission by the Head of the College at the end of the class to which he belonged. The date of the entry can at first only be approximately determined by the week in which it occurs: it is not till 1683 that the exact day is recorded.

V. The Benefactors' Book. A handsome vellum volume, engrossed in a professional hand, and here and there enriched with armorial bearings and ornamental initial letters. Its contents are of a miscellaneous character: (1) a list of the contributors to the re-building of the College in 1637: (2) a list of gifts of books to the Library: (3) a list of the fees paid by Commensales to the Library, or, from 1639 to 1649, to the Fabric Fund: (4) a list of the fees charged on Probationer Fellows for the same purposes: (5) a list of donations to the decoration of the Hall and Buttery in the year 1710. This source has supplied a nearly complete list of Commensales from about 1660: previous to that date the names of those only are given whose fees went to the Library or to the Fabric Fund: when the same fees were applied to the purchase of plate, the names are omitted from the Benefactors' Book.

The list of names obtained from these sources must still be considered as very imperfect. It is certainly very far from complete for the sixteenth century. Instances will be noticed in which the name of the member and his connexion with the College has been only accidentally recovered from sources outside the University and College records. In many other cases there is only the matriculation entry: in others only the degree entry: in others only the receipt of caution money, or the entry on the Buttery Book, or the payment of fees to the College or to the Library. In 1552, and again in 1572, a return was made to the University authorities of the members on the books of each College. The momentary flash of light which these returns throw upon the population of the Colleges at once reveals a number of names of which there is no other record: for the period before, between, and after those years, we are left almost wholly in the dark. It cannot however be doubted that at Oriel, at all events, there had been a moderate number of extranei, of all conditions, for some years before the commencement of the Matriculation Register.

Under the names here collected, it has been attempted to give every particular directly belonging to the student's academical history: his admission to the College, his matriculation, his payments, his benefactions, his degrees; and his connexion, if any, with other Colleges. Further information is only given where it has been easily obtainable: no systematic search has been made as to birth or parentage, profession, Church or other preferment, or, generally, as to any subsequent history. But it is believed that every particular has been inserted for which the College sources, hitherto unpublished, are the only authority.

What special features of interest are to be observed in the present volume, it is left to the reader to discover: but attention may perhaps be directed to the entry under the year 1681, of the gathering of old members of the College during the short sitting of the Oxford Parliament. During one week, the monotony of the Buttery Book is suddenly broken by the introduction of nineteen new names. On examination these turn out to be a little body of members of both Houses of Parliament, mostly old Commensales, who have taken the opportunity of renewing their old connexion with the College. With them have come one or two other Parliament-men, not belonging to Oriel, but introduced by their friends to share its hospitality. The old members are carefully placed in their due order of seniority, which it was doubtless the Butler's pride to remember accurately. The Parliament was then strongly opposed to the King; and it would seem probable that many, if not all, of the Oriel party, were good Whigs and good Exclusionists. Perhaps a search in the Books of other Oxford Colleges may bring to light other instances of such friendly gatherings.
